In King County, equity is fundamental to the society we wish to build. Our end goal is for full and equal access to opportunities, power and resources so all people may achieve their full potential. The MIDD Advisory Committee incorporates these values and has adopted its own equity values of "focus on equity and social justice and systemic racism" and "involvement of communities and consumers." We are working to build an inclusive board that includes the voices of underrepresented populations, people of color, immigrants and refugees, LGBTQ individuals, low-income households, youth, the elderly, rural residents, people living with disabilities and more.

Please describe your experience with and/or commitment to promoting equity. What opportunities do you see for the MIDD Advisory Committee to incorporate the voice of all communities in King County?

There are many ways to promote equity. Promoting equity and diversity in our communities begins with self-awareness. Everyone must recognize how the intersections of race, ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation, religion, socio-economic status, and being able bodied impacts us individually. We must understand how our identification within a particular group gives us privilege in certain spaces and we must be open to actively listen to marginalized, and underserved communities who experience life differently because of their social status or grouping. We must acknowledge our personal biases and seek to understand people with different experiences.
