2017 ANNUAL REPORT

ONE CONSTANT

YOU

As 2018 brings new challenges, we look back to 2017—the lessons learned this past year guide us as we move forward. The projects we undertook, new programs piloted, communities we connected with, and so much more all point to the fact that we are adept at meeting challenges. Throughout, we have confidence in one constant: you. We are continuously inspired and bolstered by the individuals and organizations who put public resources to work making King County a better place to live. As we look back at 2017, we're highlighting just a few of the projects and people we were proud to support and looking ahead to how we can grow together.

ARTS

FUELING CREATIVITY

In 2017 we saw major growth in our Arts Sustained Support program. Nonprofit groups apply once every two years for annual grants that provide the kind of reliable, unrestricted funding that is critical for organizations to thrive. In 2015, the number of applicants rose to 291 and in 2017, that number rose to 337—an unprecedented increase of 46 organizations.

4Culture strives to fund as many diverse organizations as we can through our Arts Sustained Support program—and it’s important to remember that there’s diversity in ability as well as ethnicity, age, gender, and geography. Two organizations exemplify this effort: Arts and Visually Impaired Audiences (AVIA) and Deaf Spotlight.

AVIA helps visually impaired youth participate in the arts through workshops like Orientation to Blindness, which provides training to artists and technicians in working with visually impaired children and adults—skills that these teaching artists can carry on to working in other programs.

Deaf Spotlight offers classes taught by Deaf instructors in body movement, glassblowing, and playwriting, and has partnered with Seattle Art Museum to offer exhibition tours in American Sign Language.

4Culture Sustained Support funding is crucial to making sure AVIA and Deaf Spotlight workshops are offered free or discounted for their participants.

HERITAGE

MAKING HISTORY HAPPEN

After gathering an immense amount of data from King County heritage organizations in 2016, our Heritage team undertook the challenge of learning from it in 2017—this resulted in the King County Heritage Report: Understanding the Field.

The report's key findings are already helping to strengthen, diversify, and better target the resources 4Culture provides to heritage organizations and practitioners throughout King County.

New to this network of 4Culture-funded heritage initiatives is the Bataan, Corregidor Survivors' Association & Their Families (BCSATF).

After receiving its first 4Culture grant through our Open 4Culture grant program, BCSATF successfully applied for a 2017 Heritage Projects grant. This funding supported the creation of a permanent display at the Filipino-American WWII Museum in South Seattle.

PRESERVATION

CONSERVING COMMUNITY

Like individuals and organizations across King County, our Preservation team spent much of 2017 contending with our region’s development boom.

As buildings are lost and organizations large and small get swept up in legal battles to protect important places, we’re working with community partners to innovate new approaches for preservation funding.

The Preservation Action Fund and Beyond Integrity are two of 4Culture’s collaborative initiatives to locate and rehabilitate at-risk properties, broaden our understanding of what makes a place worth saving, and put resources into the hands of property owners and stewards.

A preservation success story for 2017 was the move of the Trueblood House to its new permanent home in Kirkland. After spending a year in limbo—including a stay in a church parking lot to save it from demolition—the home’s owners received emergency funding for relocation costs and the City of Kirkland put a Preservation Special Projects grant to work completing a landmark nomination.

PUBLIC ART

EXTRAORDINARY SPACES, EVERYDAY PLACES

2017 saw our Public Art team continuing to find imaginative ways to produce engaging, dynamic works of art that meet people where they are. As a result, you'll find several new public artworks in unexpected places throughout King County—from wastewater treatment facilities to transfer stations—each bringing new dimensions to these vital everyday spaces.

Rebuilt in 2017 to meet the needs of our growing region, the Factoria Recycling and Transfer Station features two site-specific art experiences: Still Spinning by Al Price and Nature ↔ Human by Carolyn Law. Both artworks reflect a re-connection with nature and the cycles of use and reuse that take place at the facility. Meanwhile, at the new Murray Wet Weather Facility, visitors now encounter artwork designed by Robert Horner—a series of terraced rock gardens and rammed-earth retaining walls that follow a public staircase, echoing the journey water takes both from mountains to sound and through the facility.

Finally, at the Fremont Siphon, Perri Howard's Streamline takes the form of a series of colored windows visible from the street, illuminating the steadfast presence of the Siphon, working from day to night, wet to dry, and season to season.

BEING INFORMED

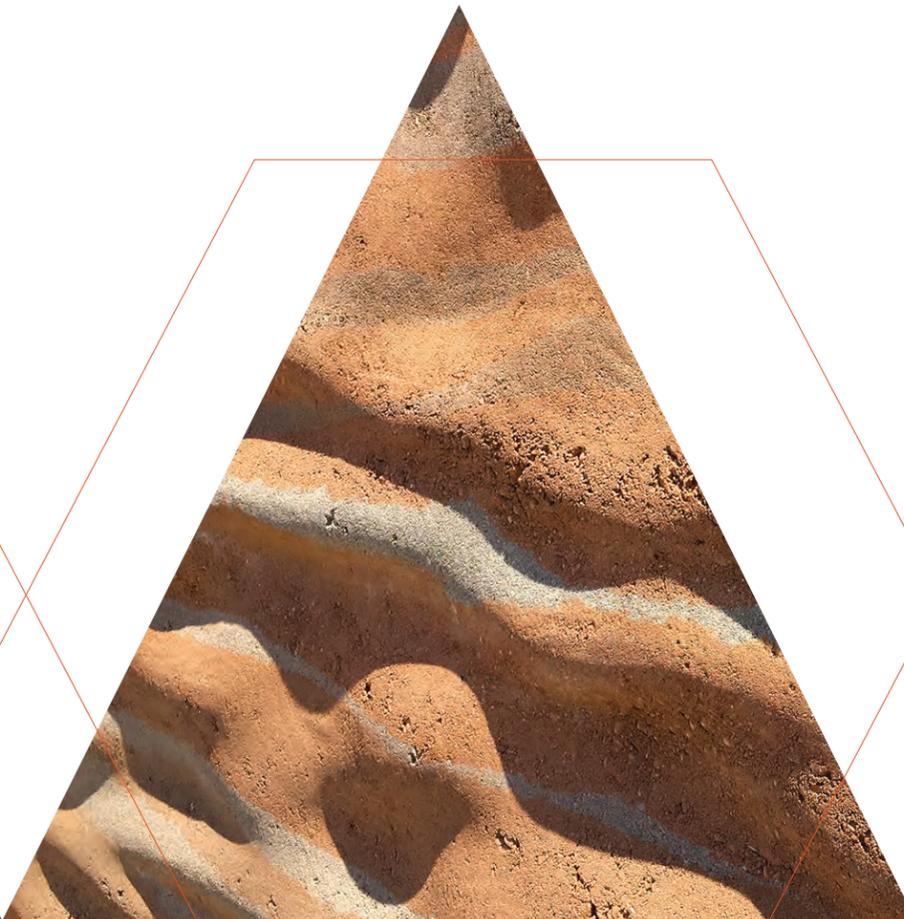

As we've tackled these new projects and regional challenges, we've learned that being informed is key—effective strategies come from knowing what we're talking about and hearing from those most impacted by our actions. To that end, we're undertaking two major initiatives in 2018 to help us learn how to better serve King County: training around racial equity and a county-wide cultural assessment.

Activist educators Norma Timbang and Scott Winn have begun working with 4Culture staff on a year-long racial equity training program, tailored to our organization and the unique role we play in this region.

Parallel to this internal learning experience, we will be looking outward. By analyzing census data and engaging in a series of listening sessions throughout King County's cities, suburbs, and unincorporated areas, our goal is to identify and understand both successes and barriers to participation in arts and culture. Look for information about how you can contribute to this county-wide cultural assessment project in 2018!
